

In Python, a list is a data structure that allows you to store a collection of elements, such as numbers or strings, in a single variable. Lists are ordered, mutable (meaning you can change the elements in the list), and can contain elements of different data types. To reverse a list in Python, you can use the built-in `reverse()` method, which modifies the list in place.